

Quod sol luceat in cordibus
nostris ad fanum

Shark Tooth

As the days passed I missed Alexi. My patient didn't understand that I couldn't leave. I pretended to visit my family but getting back to Alexi seemed unlikely. It was on my return from one of these 'visits' that I was given it.

"Charlotte." I asked

"Yes?" Charlotte replied.

"I have a gift for you." I took off the shark tooth necklace I had found in Grandma's house. "You keep this."

Charlotte was speechless. The necklace she took with trembling hands. "I will keep this forever! I will put it in my box. She pulled out a box, which looked strangely familiar. Engraved on it were the words: Quod sol luceat in cordibus nostris ad fanum.

Charlotte saw me looking and smiled. The shine of the sun is the shrine of our hearts. Cheesy I know, but it is the family motto.

"I also got you a gift!" She held up two tickets. The Olympics! My mind drifted back to Year 5 history. The Melbourne 1956 Olympics. What are the chances! 'Were going to see Dawn Fraser swim!' The burning light that had left her had returned. Sparking bright and beautiful. Just like her.
